Delmar M. Darrin Laid to Rest After Long Professional Life

Dean of lawyers in Steuben County died last week after short illness—For years judge in bankruptcy court Many members of bar and fraternities honor him at services Sunday.

Addison lost one of its oldest citizens and the dean of its professional men last week when Delmar M. Darrin died at his home on Park Place after a brief illness. Although his life began before the middle of the last century Mr. Darrin retained his mental faculties so remarkably he was able to continue the practice of law up to a few months of the time of his death.

His span of life having stretched from pre-Civil War days to the present Mr. Darrin has been able to relate to younger residents many events that were important history in the early days of this village.

Delmar Matthew Darrin, 88, died Friday afternoon, April 1, 1938 at 3 o'clock at his home in Park Place after 85 years spent as a resident of Addison.

He was born June 6, 1849 in Barrington, Yates County. His parents were the late David and Mary Matthews Darrin. The family moved to this village in 1852 and with the exception of his years in college, Mr. Darrin remained a constant resident of Addison. His parents saw to it that he had a well rounded primary and academic schooling in the public school here and also in the private school conducted here where the Methodist parsonage now stands.

Upon completion of this schooling Delmar M. Darrin entered what was then the new Cornell University where he took a bachelor of arts course which he completed in three years so that he was graduated in 1872. Thus he became a member of the first class at Cornell, and at the time of his death had been the last of that class. He spent three years in various law offices in the vicinity serving his apprenticeship and was admitted to the bar formally in 1875.

Attorney Darrin served Addison for several years until his son, Hugh became of age and passed his bar examination and he joined his father and offices were served in Addison and Corning. Hugh Darrin graduated from Hamilton College and Union Law school. His death occurred in 1917 and since that time Mr. Darrin has carried on his legal work alone.

His work as an attorney was recognized by his appointment to become a referee in bankruptcy for the southern tier counties. This appointment was made in 1901 and he has continuously served until his serious illness six weeks ago. Thousands of cases have been disposed by him during those years.

His territory extended into Steuben, Allegany and Livingston counties and later Chemung and Schuyler counties were added. However, his work in the past few years has been confined to Steuben and Allegany counties.

Attorney Darrin married Mary Dawson of Plainsfield, N. J., June 21, 1876 and to them were born three children. Her death occurred in 1926.

Throughout his life Judge Darrin was an inveterate reader and accumulated a large library of books of legal and general knowledge. He was also a keen baseball and basketball enthusiast. In addition he maintained great interest in church, civic and legal affairs at all times.

Mr. Darrin was a charter member of the Advertising Club of Addison and served upon many of its committees. In addition he was an ardent Republican throughout his life. Although never holding political office, outside of his refereeship, he could always be counted upon to speak for his party.

Hich church affiliations were Episcopalian and he was serving as

Hi-Lights and Shadows of the Week's News

Senator Borah and Senate minority leader McNary both refused to serve in the joint Senate-House T. V. A. investigation committee. Borah said he did not believe in "town meeting" investigations, but the opinion prevailed in Washington that both Republicans refused serve because Vice President Garner had not named Sen. Bridges through whose efforts brought the T. V. A. jumble to a head. That Garner was playing administration politics was widely charged for it is almost unwritten law to name the senator who forces an investigation on the investigating committee.

Yes, it's here a honk, there a honk, everywhere I go a honk!

"Well, I enjoyed the nice weather while it lasted!"

So did we, Pollyanna, and this snow, bur-r-r, isn't going to take away the rememberance of those nice days.

Bates Well Lengthens Gas Field East From Woodhull

The E. P. Bates well on the east side of Woodhull field has been brought in by the Acme Drilling Company, thus lengthening the productive area more than a mile.

The Bates is owned by New York State Natural Gas Company. It was brought in last Saturday and registered 2,500,000 feet, being 12 feet in the sand when the valves were closed.

The well was blown off this week and drilled entirely through the Oriskany sand. It was shut in Wednesday with a flow of 4,500,000 cubic feet.

The Bates was largely watched by all operators in the vicinity as well as land owners. It is located slightly south of the Addison road some two miles east of Woodhull. The fact gas was struck in the Bates answers the question so often raised in the minds of those interested, "does the Woodhull production come east of the dry Fenner Taft well?"

Success of the Bates well just as spring opens will undoubtedly lead to a large new drilling development in the newly proved section of the field. While the Bates is only about one quarter the production size of wells on the west side of the field other wells in the vicinity may be larger.

Another test of the field east of the Bates is being made by New York Natural Gas on the Charles Park farm. This is down about 1,700 feet.

Wells drilling on the west side of the field include the Neva Husted down 1,550 feet and the Eva Groves 1,500. C. A. Goble's Hattie Hand No. 2, has a crooked hole at 700 feet.

State Engineers Discuss New Bridge

Flood control engineers and state highway engineers were in conference in Hornell Wednesday morning. Among the items discussed was the future of the new bridge over the Canisteo River, Main street. As far as can be determined the flood control engineers did express a wish for a longer bridge to enable a greater volume of water to flow through the narrow channel here, but no mention was made that the bridge would not be constructed if this additional space is not secured, as was currently rumored throughout Main street during the forepart of the week.

As far as can be learned from unofficial sources the status of the construction remains the same as last week with the county highway committee of the supervisors yet to complete the purchase of properties for rights of way for the temporary bridge.

Fortieth Anniversary of Addison Grange Celebrated Last Week

Dinner, pageant and speeches commemorate the founding of local order in 1898—State Steward Timothy Thomas talks to group in high school auditorium—Mr. and Mrs. Loper honored.

The fortieth anniversary of the founding of Addison Grange was celebrated Friday evening with a dinner, talks and a pageant given in Addison High School. Out-of-town speakers included Timothy Thomas, steward of New York State Grange and Clair Arnburg, Steuben Pomona deputy. The pageant was written by Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Armstrong.

There were approximately 125 grangers and their guests seated at the dinner in the commercial rooms of the school. Members of the Addison High School senior class served the meal. Community singing was led by the Rev. John V. Axtell, pastor of the Presbyterian Church. Following the dinner a picture was taken of the charter members of Addison Grange who were present, together with local County and State grange officials.

The group adjourned from dinner to the school auditorium where a large number of guests gathered to witness the ceremonies. Michael Kane, master of the grange gave the address of welcome with a few, well chosen words. Kenneth Armstrong gave a short history of Addison beginning with the first settler Sam Rice. Telling of the hardships endured by the pioneers he traced the development of business in this village to the day in 1898 a text, and my text is, "Responsibility then and now." I feel a responsibility in trying to tell this. The folks forty years ago shouldered a great responsibility and carried it out. They respond to the need and gave a sincere answer to an important cause. Your charter members heeded the call to get together and work together and organize a grange that the oldest industry in existence, agriculture, might have the chance to organize.

"They organized, these grangers, and did a good work. They are handing down an organization that is full of good work. History teaches that to carry on a good work is a difficult matter. It is hard. The good Book says whatever foundation is built upon, be it hay, wood, stubble, silver or gold, shall be when a group met to found the Addison Grange.

The grange male quartet consisting of Kenneth Armstrong, Wilbor Hannahs, Kenneth Dann and Raymond Young sang a number, "The Cheery Lights of Home". Mr. Thomas opened his talk with a number of stories which brought down the house. Launching into a more serious mood, he said in part:

"This is my first visit to a Grange in Steuben County, but I have long taken off my hat to the big delegation from this Pomona which is always on hand at state grange meetings. When I was invited to speak on this great anniversary milestone I wanted to take

SCIENCE DOES NOT LAG

The other day there was placed in my hand a piece of crystal-like substance. It was clearer than glass, as transparent in fact as nature's own quartz crystal. Lighter than glass it is much stronger, and will bend considerably without breaking. This new substance is a plastic called "Lucite", yet about ninety per cent of the ultra violet rays will pass through it. Most amazing of all it is made of coal, air and water.

The scientist who created lucite has opened a new volume of industrial development, as hundreds of uses for the substance can be thought of by even an unimaginative person. One demand is at present taxing the supply, that demand being for the manufacture of lenses for cheap cameras, but as time goes on the facility for manufacture will increase and new demands will open new markets which will create new avenues of employment.

Lucite is only one of hundreds of new materials which science has developed during the period of depression. These many new servants of man are just marking time, waiting until business has sufficient confidence for capital to be risked in new industries to produce them. From 1933 on for several years there has been a policy holding in Washington to discredit all industry, blaming the men who have given employment the country over for the forces which threw men out of work. That government policy of "smearing" business has had its day and now people are beginning to realize that attitude has served to extend the depression instead of ending it.

As a matter of fact industry is not the one which has lagged behind. If government had kept up its improvement and efficiency half as well as industry the depression would never have lasted so long, and this latest depression would never have come at all. It has been the hampering of industry by government and the creating of obstruction which scare capital away from industrial investments that has created an intolerable unemployment situation.

THE BREATH TESTER

Motor Police Commissioner Percy Foote of Pennsylvania has suggested a novel method of determining the degree of drunkenness of drivers apprehended on the highways. Commissioner Foote proposes that tests of drivers under the influence of alcohol be taken right on the spot to prove their fitness or unfitness to operate a motor vehicle. His idea is to equip every state police car to make accurate measurement of the amount of alcohol in the bloodstream.

His proposal is to make the suspected motorist breathe into a balloon or to take a whiff of his breath with an atomizer. The sample of breath would then be put through a tester which would accurately measure the amount of alcohol in the driver's system.

Naturally it would be necessary to have legislation making such method of determining the state of drunkenness accepted by the courts. The testers would have to be proved scientifically accurate. There would be a terrible howl raised by the liquor interests and the motorists who customarily mix alcohol and gasoline together regardless of the loss of life this habit causes. But every person who takes heed of the thousands of lives snuffed out annually by cars half guided by drivers with alcohol warped brains, should add his voice to the demand that drunken drivers be removed from our highways.

The question of personal moral degradation through use of alcohol does not enter into this widespread demand for allowing no drunk to take the wheel. The father who gathers up the form of his crumpled child from the pavement where it has been crushed under the wheels of a car driven by a drunk-crazed motorist—the woman who sees the mutilated body of her breadwinning husband pulled from the wreckage created by collision with an alcoholic's car, does not stop to reason as to the moral effect of alcohol on the drunken, killer driver. No, the victims think only of stopping such drivers from taking the wheel—permanently.

The great difficulty has been for courts to get a conviction, for liquor control laws were ever framed by legislators who seem willing that glaring loopholes be left in them. To prove a driver was actually drunk has often been next to impossible, even though he was so befuddled he could hardly keep his car between the telephone poles. If a tester can solve this problem and tell irrefutably when a man is intoxicated and unable to drive a car, then the sober drivers of the nation should rejoice.

THE REORGANIZATION FIGHT

Once more this Administration has affronted the rank and file of American citizens and these men and women have shown their displeasure by voicing objections to Congress against impending legislation. Last summer when the president was so determined to win more power by packing the Supreme Court that he sacrificed the life of one of his chief lieutenants in the Senate struggle, the country became vocal. Men and women from Maine to Texas expressed their opposition with letters and telegrams which convinced a majority of the Senators that they should bow to the will of the people. The Senate killed the court packing plan and in defeating the measure handed Mr. Roosevelt the first major defeat since he became President.

Last fall a wages and hours bill, which was especially distasteful to southerners, was also voted down in Congress, giving the President a second taste of the dregs of defeat. Two weeks ago a battle started raging once more in the U. S. Senate which threatened to upset a third brain child of the White House—the reach for more executive power in the reorganization bill. Instantly the administration began applying the heat to Senators. The Roosevelt-Farley forces moved up and down the aisles of the Senate promising wavering legislators this and that political plum to vote for the measure. It is said that such a shameless exhibition of buying power with political promises has not been seen in Washington since the spoiler days of Andrew Jackson. Five Senators were said to have been bought by these methods and the administration rushed the bill to vote by gagging opposition debate.

Then the House had another crack at the bill. And the deluge of telegrams which had been raining the Senate turned into a veritable downpour which all but inundated the House. Administration leaders who have ever tried to stifle debate on Roosevelt measures, hurried to bring the thing through the mill before the entire country became aroused. This attempt came in the form of a motion to limit debate to five minutes a member—the most brazen effort at killing honest investigation of the bill by arrogant gag rule. The result of that vote against the Administration was so decisive the President's henchmen sensed the entire bill was threatened with defeat.

Telegrams were pouring into Congressmen's hands at the rate of some 150,000 a day and the Administration leaders conferred at length by long distance with the President on vacation in Georgia. The result of that conversation showed the Roosevelt forces were certain they again stared in the face of defeat, for they eagerly sought a compromise to get the bill passed. The main feature of the compromise would be to allow Congress to veto any act of the President under the reorganization measure by simply a majority, instead of requiring a two-thirds vote.

As this is written the final fate of the reorganization bill has not been decided. The compromise offered by Administration forces may bring passage of the measure, or it may turn out that this anti-administration coalition of Democrats and Republicans can kill the measure in toto. But this much is certain—the voice of the people has been heard again when the President sought more personal power, and that voice has been effective in checking that drive for power. Mr. Roosevelt may ridicule the people who telegraphed Congress—may scoff that the telegrams were fostered by special interests, but down in his heart he knows that he has been checked by the thinking people who will do all in their power to check his assuming a dictatorship.

For the people are not fooled by that southern speech in which the President disclaimed any desire to become a dictator. The very fact that he saw fit to deny the danger, is evidence that in the minds of the people there does exist the danger of dictatorship in this country. And the person who must always fall under greatest suspicion of desiring dictatorship, is the person who tries to amass under his own hand greater and greater power which once was reserved to Congress, or to the people of the states.

The danger of dictatorship in America does exist—let no man laugh you out of it. But that danger is minimized by every united move such as the people made last summer in the Supreme Court fight, and again this spring when the President asked for a reorganization bill in which the hands of Congress were to be tied. Americans generally have no stomach for seeing themselves in the same position as the people of Germany and Austria, or the people of Italy. If a dictatorship were in effect these words would never be printed, for the freedom of the press and freedom of speech would go out like a snuffed candle. And the freedom of expression has been the greatest safeguard to liberty since men first broke the life and death power of kings.

LAW AGAINST SPARE TIRES

The present tax law which penalizes, through the undistributed profits tax, a conservative and thrifty industry for building up a reserve against hard times is like a law taxing an automobile driver for carrying a spare tire to insure uninterrupted operation.

A taxation or legislative policy which discourages and destroys industry, gradually sets the stage for advocates of state socialism to claim that private interprise has broken down and that government must step in and operate the affairs of its citizens.

It seems fantastic that such a program is being deliberately promoted here. But that idea is growing in the minds of persons who have watched the current world trend to submerge the individual under government dictation, and the increasing drive to constantly inject government into business, and into the affairs of private citizens in our own country.

The Reorganization Bill

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

THE bill for the reorganization of the Executive, at this writing, has not passed, and it is my firm belief that it will not pass, in its present form, if the House of Representatives listens to the country. The attempt of the Administration leaders to send the Senate bill, which passed by only a margin of seven votes, to conference in the House without having to go to the House Committee, failed. It is now in the hands of the House Committee with a possibility still for debate, amendment, or a peaceful grave.

The House and Conference Committee of Congress still have the power to eliminate the four really objectionable features of this bill. These features are: 1. The substitution of a single Civil Service administrator, responsible wholly to the President, in the place of a bi-partisan board. The fact that this administrator is appointed for fifteen years need not be considered as a check, since the case of Arthur Morgan, who was appointed, we remember, for nine years. 2. The requirements of a two-thirds vote of Congress to over-ride any measure within the act, which the President may choose to make. 3. The removal of Congressional control on the Executive purse, by making the auditing retrospective and not prospective. 4. The subjection to the President of such quasi-legislative agencies as the T. V. A.

These are the four really serious and dangerous features of this bill. The way they might be exploited must be considered in connection with the whole practice of American politics, and particularly with the tendencies of this Administration. This bill with these features in it will entrench and fortify the President as the super-boss of national patronage with something like $5,000,000,000 of the budget to shift around.

It is amazing to me that Senator Norris, for whom I have great respect, supported this bill in its present form.

As late as March 16 the Senator, in the debate on the bill, opposed including the T. V. A. under the agencies which the President could transform or eliminate at will, which he can certainly do in the present draft.

The Senator said then: "I should be opposed to the T. V. A. being attached to any department, I care not what it is. The very theory of the T. V. A. act itself was to make the organization independent of any department, independent of any President, independent of any political change which might come over the country, by which we would go from one extreme to the other, as the country often does; to put the Tennessee Valley Authority as nearly as possible upon a business basis, upon a permanent basis, so that it would not be in the power of either party if it came into power some time to overthrow the T. V. A. before it would be possible to have a friendly administration in power."

Senator Norris's remarks were exactly pertinent. The T. V. A. was created by an act of Congress, and the new bill gives the President, and not Congress, the right to abolish it.

The so-called liberal supporters of this legislation make exactly the same error that they made in respect to the bill for the reorganization of the Supreme Court. They see things with the short view, with respect to a specific administration, with a specific program. They do not look at measures with respect to their long-range effect under any conceivable sort of administration. They are willing to see powers established which, given a change of sentiment in the country, may be used by a President, hostile to everything they believe, automatically to offend the democratic process which, if they are ever in a minority, will be their only safeguard.

As far as the Civil Service provisions are concerned the bill does not, in the estimation of this column, go nearly far enough. They do not touch basic issues. The Civil Service problem is not a problem of clerks and stenographers. It is a problem of building up an intelligent and continuing bureaucracy in positions up to under Secretaries of State, with an esprit de corps of devoted public service, and with a freedom and security so great that they can feel free to criticize as well as support the policies of the Administration, on the basis of their considered and expert judgment.

It is a problem of getting rid of patronage as a political instrument, in order that deliberation and considered judgment may be put in its place.

But it does not abolish patronage to decrease the patronage dispensation privileges of Congress and increase the patronage distributing privileges of the President. On the contrary, it creates a very much more dangerous form of patronage.

The vote of many Senators on the bill is politically illuminating. Senator Wagner, of New York, voted against it. Senator Wagner is one of the most astute politicians in Congress, and it is probable that he recognizes what the Gallup Polls increasingly show, what the changed attitude of William Green and John L. Lewis shows, and what will soon be apparent to all politicians, namely, that the leadership of the President is no longer a political asset in the United States

What the country is demanding from the Administration and Congress is precisely what it demanded in 1932: leadership in dealing with a very serious depression. Actually, leadership in dealing with the most precipitous depression in our history, which is rapidly approaching the point of 1932.

And not a single constructive idea for handling this, which is our only immediate important problem, has come from the Administration.

On the contrary, since November, the Administration has been blocking every attempt of Congress to deal realistically with the situation.

The members of Congress are free to use their considerate judgment about this bill or any other bill. They don't need to be afraid that if they switch their vote they're backing the wrong horse.

What they need to fear is that they are backing no horse

Capital Gains and Unearned Wealth

By WALTER LIPPMANN

By its actions on the tax bill the Senate finance committee has given Congress the chance for the relief of unemployment than can be done by any other means within its power. For there is almost no doubt at all, I think, that the stoppage of capital investment is the main cause of the depression in America. No doubt there are other contributing causes—such as uneconomic prices and wage rates in special industries like building and railroads, such as the political deadlock over the utilities. But the fundamental and general cause is that private investment did not increase when public spending diminished. And the chief reason for that is that the combined effect of the high surtaxes, the undistributed profits and the capital gains taxes was to destroy the prospect of profits that would justify men taking the risks of investing their savings.

The Senate finance committee offers what looks like a substantial practical remedy. The less important part of its program is the repeal of the undistributed profits tax. I call it the less important because that tax is not in itself wrong in principle, and even if it is repealed now, it will be restored some day in different form. The tax has worked mischievously, partly because it was badly constructed but chiefly because it was combined with other taxes that worked viciously. The great achievement of the committee is in recognizing at long last the basic error of the capital gains tax. The committee has admitted what the Treasury, it appears, has not yet realized: that to tax capital gains as if they were income is wholly wrong in principle and very destructive in practice.

In his statement to the committee, the Under-Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Roswell Magill, defended the capital gains tax in principle, pointing out that it has been in effect ever since 1913 when the Sixteenth Amendment was adopted. "The basic reason, no doubt, has been," he said, "that such gains represent a capacity to pay quite as great as that represented by income from salaries, interest, dividends, or the like, at least in the absence of great changes in the general level of prices." That is, of course, true. A man who has made a capital gain has the money to pay a tax. But what Mr. Magill failed to note is that if you subject a man with money to a tax which deprives him of almost all his gains, he simply will not take the risks that he must take if he is to make capital gains.

And that is just what has happened. The effect of almost confiscatory surtaxes on large incomes combined with a tax on capital gains at these high rates has brought about a situation where the rich and well-to-do can make almost no capital gains. But they can make capital losses. If the high surtaxes are to be retained the capital gains tax has to be modified radically.

This is the immediate reason why it is so necessary to reduce the capital gains tax. But it is even more important for the long run to realize clearly what a capital gains tax is and why it has always been a cardinal error to treat it as an income tax.

If I pay you $10,000 for a house that cost you $5,000, you have a capital gain of $5,000. You are richer. But the house is just the same old house that it always was. The transaction does not represent any increase in the national wealth. All that has happened is that $5,000 of my savings are now deposited in your bank instead of being used to build another house. If then, the government takes a large part of that money, it is not paying its current bills by taxing new wealth that either of us has produced. It is paying current bills out of the capital I have saved after I have already paid an income tax on the income from which that money was saved. The same money has been taxed once as part of my income, and a second time when you receive it as a capital gain.

The tax is not an income tax at all. It is a capital levy. Once that truth is understood many things become clearer. We can understand, for example, why this tax did not seem so fatally bad between 1922 and 1929. In that period the budget was not only in balance but there was a surplus. So when the government made its capital levy, the capital was not used up to pay current bills. It was used to reduce the national debt. Thus the savings taken from one set of capitalists were used to pay off bondholders who then had these same savings to invest in private industry.

When the budget shows a surplus the capital gains tax is a radically different thing from the same tax when there is a deficit. When there is a surplus, the levy on capital does not deprive industry of capital. But when there is a deficit, the capital levy is a way of using up capital to meet current expenses. That is why the tax since 1934, apart from the fact that it is now exorbitant, has had a wholly different effect from the earlier capital gains tax.

The importance of the Senate committee's action lies in the fact that it recognizes that capital gains should not be taxed as income. This is a great advance toward a more economic tax system. It is perhaps sufficient to meet the practical situation today. But if Congress wishes to deal with the matter thoroughly, it ought to abolish all taxes on capital gains as long as the budget is unbalanced. It should never permit a levy on capital, either on gains or, for that matter, on inheritances, except when the budget is in balance and the funds go to a reduction of the national debt.

If Congress did that it would really be taxing income and not using capital to pay current bills.

There is a reason, of course, why the capital gains tax has always been popular here, whereas in England, for example, it has never been. The reason is that in this rapidly growing country, fortunes have been made easily, often by the mere increase in the capital value of real estate, mines, patents, franchises, or the securities which are based upon them. In these fortunes there is a large unearned increment; men have gotten rich not by producing wealth but by owning property that increased in value because the country was growing.

It has always seemed obvious to many that fortunes of this kind ought to be taxed especially, and the greatest of American liberal reformers, Henry George, made this conviction articulate. The capital gains tax reflects that feeling, and no one who has absorbed the teachings of Henry George will ever be content to argue for the repeal of the capital gains tax without substituting for it taxes on the unearned increment from natural resources, patents, and privileged monopolies.

The trouble with the capital gains tax, however, is that it strikes indiscriminately at gains due to prudent investment and enterprise as well as at gains that are an unearned increment. This is precisely what Henry George, and all truly liberal reformers, sought to avoid; their object was to tax unearned increment and to free enterprise.

What Congress ought to do, and what the New Deal ought to do, is to begin an inquiry into new taxes carefully directed toward the recapture of unearned increment with a view to substituting them for the generalized capital gains tax.

Why Scouting and What is Your Community doing about it?

Even before the 12 year old gets his first taste of actual Scouting, the Boy Scout movement often has had some effect upon his life.

The writer personally knows the case of a six year old boy whose temperament, environment and handicaps had made him a serious problem case One of the kind who flew into a rage at the slightest provocation, that finally ended in ill health and depressed mentality.

Old fashioned whippings of the strenuous variety and other punishment had no effect except to make the lad's case more acute.

His interest in Scouting became aroused, however, through the uniform and camp equipment of local Scouts. Then it was carefully explained to him about the wonderful experiences that fall to the lot of Scouts in camp and on hikes and in their troop activities, after which it was not too difficult to inspire the six year old with the idea that if he ever wished to become a Scout he must learn to behave like a Scout.

Eagerly he memorized the Scout Oath and with interest he listened at night to the reading of the Scout Laws in lieu of a bed time story until he became thoroughly imbued with the desire to be like a Scout in every way possible, and the result has been a rare and interesting transformation.

To every boy belongs the right to dream of, and hunger for, adventure, and to have that hunger satisfied too, and so, as our average boy throws his line into the old fishing hole there appears to him, in his mind's eye (nevertheless real to him) a procession of adventuresome persons who sought a better way, a shorter route, or greater wealth, but the impulse that drove them ever on was nearly always the romance of adventure, and while your boy watches the imagery of a life that is past sweep through his imagination, the spirit of adventure weaves its spell over him with the aid of the spell, he lives again in the land of make-believe with pre-historic man, the Roman soldier, the Greek gladiator, the American Indian, the old prospector and the cowpuncher, and his more recent heroes, the athletes, the auto racer, and the aviator.. Neverless, he sees himself in a modern role, and hence the strong appeal of Scouting.

And what a magic spell the campfire can weave over him, as the light fades into darkness and the sounds of night in the open, far from the noise of civilization, become more audible and intriguing; the spell of the flickering campfire becomes so strong that a legend has arisen in the Northwest to the effect that confidences exchanged between persons under its mystic influence are sacred and must never be divulged to another. A strong influence on lasting friendship is this mysitc spell, of camp life with its dancing shadows and entrancing flickers —— a spell which the light of day and reality causes one to hunger again for its quiet confidence.

As a Scout he learns something about First Aid and how to talk through space with the aid of signal flags or sign language, and how to follow a trail through woods; how to cover long distances in a short time without tiring one's self out; the proper use of a knife and axe, so as to get the best results, as well as provide the greatest safety; the way to build a fire quickly and safely, and how to cook without utensils. Then he must show that he knows something about practical problems by starting the thrift habit and saving money, or raising produce that can be used or sold. He knows how to find his way about with the use of a compass, and since this is a mechanical age, and an age of speed, he must learn and pratice rules of safety, and furnish evidence that he has put into practice his Scout Oath and Scout Law. He must swim, he must be able to make and read a map; he must be able to know how to judge distance, size and numbers, within a fair degree of accuracy. He must know something about nature study, a few of the stars and how to find the North Star as well as the more common variety of plant or bird life about him. Then again, he must show evidence that he has put into practice, his Scout Oath and his Scout Law.

Scouting is where boyhood dreams come true, where citizenship is built, and where habits of character are developed that last through a life time, where a boy learns the "Daily Good Turn", and where preparedness means planning for a successful life that lets the boy prove to himself that there was, and is, a code of honor along the trail to adventure that makes life richer for the obesrving.

Scouting offers to thinking men and women the greater opportunity to help active young boys to find fun in character building adventure.

In your community as in most others, men of the highest type and greatest responsibilities find time, yes take the time, to bend their efforts in giving the boys of your locality a chance to help themselves. Many of these men assert that developing boys into good citizens is the most gratifying work they ever undertook.

The milk route which was started August 1, 1937 by the Paterson M & C Co. from Prattsburg with 5 patrons has increased to about 20 with many more in prospect.

They have two large producers one being a 15 can producer during the flush of the season, which is from the Alvah Armstrong farm on the Mitchellville road. Prior to April 1st this milk went to Borden's at Bath. A great deal of credit is due Leo. T. James the field man for building up this route. The company anticipated that by giving the patrons good prices and fair treatment the route would expand.

The Paterson M. & C. Co. have a very good fluid milk and cream market which is shipped to N. Y. City as well as to Paterson, N. J. Everything has been done and said against this route to discredit it, but in spite of this it continues to grow. Their price for February was $1.90 per cent for milk testing 3.5%.

CHAPTER CHATTER

The county agriculture delegates of the FFA met at Jasper March 31 with the agriculture teachers of the county. Delegates were present from Corning, Campbell, Jasper, Greenwood, Avoca and Addison schools.

Dinner was served at 6:30 by the Senior Class of the Jasper school. After the dinner the meeting was called to order by chairman of Ag teachers Mr. Finnerty and later he turned the meeting over to county group leader Joe Coleman. At the meeting it was decided to let individual schools decide upon whether to have softball or baseball, and that each school should have at least one person participating in the county Ag speaking contest which is sponsored by the Pomona Grange. This will be held in May or June.

The giving of county awards was also discussed and it was voted to leave this matter to the Ag teachers.

Mr. Finnerty then introduced Mr. Hatch who was a former teacher of agriculture and is now working as state inspector. Mr. Hatch talked on the county awards. He said that he liked to see it done as it gave the boys something to work for.

Mr. Finnerty also told boys and teachers that no calf can enter the county fair this year unless tested for abortion.

The group leader then asked each school to send all the news and any other important matter they might have to him so he can put it in the New York Times.

The meeting was then turned back to the agriculture teachers and Mr. Densmore of Campbell gave a talk on parliamentary procedure. The delegates then elected a set of county officers to assist the group leader. The following officers were elected: President, Leonard Hough, Campbell; vice president, Alex Dugan, Corning; secretary, Irving Davis, Corning; treasurer, Wendell Johnson, Addison. The office of reporter was given to Joe Coleman as this is part of the leader's work. Gene Cornell, Jasper, was elected farm watch dog.

The two boys wanted credit the fourth year in Ag and brought in their records to be looked over by Mr. Finnerty. Everyone was glad to see the boys back in school for the day.

A meeting for the out-of-school group of Young Farmers will be held Monday, April 11 at the annex. The usual meeting night is Tuesday but the date conflicted with the Grange meeting in Troupsburg at which time Mr. Finnerty is scheduled to speak. All Members of Addison Faculty Except Two Sign New Contracts

The monthly meeting of the Addison Board of Education was held Thursday evening. Present were trustees Laffkas, Park, Perry, Russ, Ackerson, Baxter, Armstrong and Miller.

Supervising Principal Irving R. Gladstone announced that all members of the 1937-38 faculty had signed their contracts with the exception of Mrs. Alice Breese and Mrs. Frank Finnerty who have decided not to teach the coming year. Letters from these two teachers were read which expressed their appreciation of the cooperation of the principal and board during the time of their work in Addison High School.

Mr. Gladstone gave the final report of the nurse including the testing of students' hearing. The report showed a very low percentage of defective hearing in the school. Tests showed that no teacher had defective hearing. Trustee Baxter reported he had replaced the window in the former grammar school building broken by boys playing ball. After some discussion it was suggested that the larger boys be required to transfer their ball playing to the large grounds prepared for the purpose at the main school building.

The board discussed the request of the music department that the school band be permitted to attend the sectional meeting at Cuba, N. Y. Permission was granted and members of the board expressed their pleasure at the fine musical given by this department a few days before.

The trustees listened to a complete report issued by Miss Bethel Caster, Home Economics teacher, of the school lunch conducted during December, January, February and March. The report showed that a total of 6,000 persons were fed during the four months' period, the average number a day being 91 for December, 98 for January, 83 for February, 78 for March, making a daily average of 88 for the period. Some students paid cash for their servings, some exchanged produce while others worked for their lunches. The average a day of those paying cash was 51, those exchanging produce 15 and those working was 22. The cash receipts for the past month were $46.68 and the cash disbursements $44.51. The object of the school lunch is to feed students as nearly as possible at absolute cost. That this was accomplished was shown by the fact that at the end of the four months' period, after all expenses were paid, the lunch fund has a cash balance of just $2.17.

Annual Mother and Daughter dinner in Masonic rooms attended by over 100—Highlight of night's event is awarding Golden Eaglet.

Miss Barbara Whitmore, 17, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Matthew Whitmore, was honored as Addison's outstanding Girl Scout, at the annual Mother and Daughter Banquet held in the Masonic rooms here Monday night. There were 109 at the supper which was served by ladies of the Eastern Star. Miss Whitmore was awarded the Golden Eaglet, the highest award which can be given a Girl Scout.

After the supper the program opened with Mrs. Irving Gladstone, chairman of the troop committee, as toastmistress. Grace was sung by the girls of the troop.

Mrs. T. J. Jacoby, county commissioner of Corning and Painted Post troops, was presented as an honored guest as was Miss C. Mae Crysler, Girl Scout executive of Corning and Painted Post district. Miss Crysler recently received a promotion to a larger field in the east.

Leaders Complimented

Mrs. Gladstone then complimented the leaders, Capt. Mrs. Kenneth Armstrong, Mrs. Bernard Wilson and Miss Jeannette Dykins for their industry, perseverance, ambition, trustworthiness and progress in managing and building the troop and troop program into its present high state in Scouting.

Mrs. Armstrong spoke of the work of the troop committee in making possible the program in Addison and in the assistance given the leaders at all times and aid in any problems presented.

Miss Chrysler

Miss Chrysler, who is a professional Girl Scout leader with national headquarters ranking as an executive of ability was the next speaker. She gave the history of the Girl Scout movement from the time it became the idea and obsession with Juliette Low until its present high state of development. She mentioned some of the outstanding women in the movement, some changes seen through the 26 years the movement has been in America. Some of the changes now being made in Scouting and trends expected were outlined by the speaker.

Awarding Eaglet

The highlight of the evening's program was the presentation of the Golden Eaglet to Miss Whitmore. The Girl Scouts of the troop formed a horseshoe with the leaders at the top of the arc. Catherine and Mary Lyons were color guards. Miss Barbara was escorted to the top of the arc by Captain Armstrong where they were met by Mrs. Lynn Taylor, who was chairman of the troop committee during most of Barbara's Girl Scout days.

Mrs. Taylor told the meaning of the Golden Eaglet and the requirements to attain this coveted honor. Among these are: three years a Girl Scout, must be 16, 17 or 18 years of age, have attained 21 merit badges of which 17 are required, have camped two weeks and have trained a Girl Scout through tenderfoot days. In addition a letter to Girl Scout headquarters on the girl's career must be presented.

Among the merit badges are: Athletic, child training, cooking, dressmaking, first aid, health, home nursing, hostess, housekeeper, junior citizen, laundress, needlewoman, pioneer, rambler, swimming and four electives to make the 21.

Mrs. Taylor then presented the badge to Mrs. Whitmore who pinned the badge on her daughter. Barbara in turn presented her mother a corsage bouquet. This part of the picturesque and solemn program closed with the girls of the troop singing "Hymn of Scouting".

Other songs presented by the girls were: "Mermaid" "Boatman" "White Coral Bells" and "O Lady Moon". Miss Chrysler led the entire assemblage in singing popular and old favorite tunes. The program closed with taps being sung by the troop.

Mrs. Peter Laffkas was general chairman of the banquet. She was ably assisted by Mrs. Francis Hil, chairman of the ticket reservations, and other members of the troop committee. The menu was served by Tuscarora Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star with Mrs. Alfred Chatfield, as chairman, assisted by Mrs. Ruth Gillespie, Mrs. John E. Magician at Assembly Program Friday Morning

The sophomores of the Addison High School won the Silver Knight award for March according to an assembly announcement by Bernard Wilson made Friday. The award was made to Shirley O'Brien, president of the class. The seniors were in second place, freshmen in third and juniors fourth. The award is on the basis of the number on the school honor roll, number attending school during period and Reflector sales.

Principal Irving Gladstone announced that all school organizations are required to give an accounting of finances during the past year and to turn over any funds left after expenses to Bernard Wilson, faculty treasurer.

Gene Gordon, assisted by Mrs. Gordon, gave a demonstration of feats of magic. He provoked many laughs by his adroit manipulation and conversation. His use of two of the grade school boys added much to the merriment of the program. He performed the usual card tricks, colored flags and many other tricks. He closed his program with a demonstration of ventriloquism, talking, singing and crying.

The necessity for a community calendar, or a place where there will be a clearing house forinformation relative to events has been amply demonstrated here and is being demonstrated each week. Conflicting events draw divided crowds and all suffer in attendance, interest and financial revenue.

Rumors can sure fly through town in a hurry. Recent rumors about the bridge not being built seem to have no foundation according to a conversation Walter Goff had with Engineer Drumm of Hornell and the State Highway Department.

Sometimes it is rather hard to get right up to press time and have a lot of white space to fill, so a push for the company and nonsense has to fill the remainder of the space. I wish more contributors would write in little odd things they see and hear about the village. I'd like to be every place, but just can't do it.

One Front Street woman was quite chagrined one day last week when she discovered a pie gone. She had made a delicious, rather it looked delicious, pie for a homecoming celebration. However, when she went to get the pie it was gone. Investigation revealed a neighborhood dog had confiscated the pie so the poor homecomer had none.

Guess Addison is going to erode with cities of old as described recently by Frank Finnerty. The first section to slip into the river in many months fell in sometime over the week-end on the south shore of the river near Main Street.

Front Street residents were awakened from their slumbers late one night last week by shouts of all sorts coming from human throats. It seems some intoxicated fellows were set upon beating a passerby. Chief Bovee was called and quickly quelled the disturbance

Mrs. Rambler and I sure appreciate all the kindness shown to us during the past two weeks by friends in Addison. It does not seem possible that in the short 15 months we have been together here that so many people knew us to be so good to us. Cards, presents, flowers and the loan of cars have all been appreciated much more than any words of either of us can express. And I'm sure the litle Rambler is expressing his appreciation in his own little way.

The snow storms of the past week have not been too welcome after the warm weather of March's last week. The cold weather brought out many furs and heavy coats which had been stored. The weather also spoiled things for the trout fishermen.

Gene Gordon, magician, who presented a program in assembly Friday morning, thought Bill Lundrigan faculty member was 16 years old according to the laugh he provoked in assembly. This is the second time within a year Bill has been mistaken for a student. Better grow a beard Bill.

Fortieth Anniversary of Addison Grange

tested by fire. They laid the foundation of this grange forty years ago. Let the silver in this foundation represent the effort they put forward to bring out the gold.

"There is unrest today, and a great need. There is no better way to build strong than to get our organization strong. Shall we hand down the grange of today to those who come after strong? Or, forsake our rural homes--our boys and girls? Let us heed the call for this united, brotherly effort."

Addison Grange was organized under the guidance of Albert Loper, who with Mrs. Loper was a charter member of Rathbone Grange and master of that organization when Addison Grange was founded in 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Loper were presented to the audience and they were honored with great applause for the part they had in starting the forty years work of Addison Grange.

The last part of the program opened with the pageant, for which much preparation had been made by the members. The cast was printed here last week. Wilbor Hannahs was the reader. The German band of high school students marched around the auditorium twice before the curtains opened on this "The first forty years" in Addison Grange history. The first four scenes depicted the organization meeting of the Grange, a picnic, the burning of the mortgage and scenes from past days. These were described in the history previously printed here.

The fifth scene was a tableau with the degree officers in white. The reader pointed out that "1938 finds the Grange in a healthy and prosperous condition with 250 members and is well financed in a good home. The Grange is active in community activities. The renewed activities point to making the next 40 years as full of tradition and services as the past 40 years."

District Deputy Clair Arnburg gave a short talk in which he said, "I'm sure we all enjoy this occasion. I congratulate the members of Addison Grange on their 40th milestone of this train. There is much difference in the manner in which work is carried on today and that in which it was conducted 40 years ago. And we should go forward and carry on what has gone before." A mixed quartet closed the program with Raymond Young, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Armstrong and Mrs. Edgar Dann as vocalists.

An informal program of round and square dancing was then enjoyed with the Reagan brothers providing music.

Thurston Church Has Unique Program Sat.

The Junior Students' League of Nations of the Practical Bible Training School, Bible Park, Johnson City, N. Y., will be in Thurston Saturday night for a religious service to be conducted by the group of 15 students of 12 nations. The service will be held in the Christian Church at Thurston at 7:30 o'clock. Eight-Team Tournament Coming—Addison Again Beats 'Y' Team

The Addison Merchants split a play-off with the Y. M. C. A. Blackhawks of Elmira after losing the first game by a 37-27 score the Merchants settled down to defeat the Blackhawks 44 to 43 in a thrilling contest Tuesday night. With Ropelewsky, St. Casimir and Elmira High School star and Robinson another Elmira High School basketeer added to their lineup the Y team was confident of an easy victory but they failed to count on J. Grange, Robbins and Hargrave who made 13, 12 and 10 points respectively.

With a minute and five seconds to go Addison trailed by three points but the typical last minute rally remedied that. Bisbee dropped 13 counters through the hoop to lead the Y scoring with Ropelewsky second with 9.

An eight-team tournament will be held by the locals for three nights, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Some of the teams which have signified their intention of entering are Westfield, St. Casimir, Corning Merchants, Elkland, Genesee, Wellsburg, Cross Roads, Dann's Dairy, St. Marys and Addison.

Corning Music Group Concert In AHS Tonight

The Corning Philharmonic orchestra will play its first concert outside of that community in the Addison High School auditorium tonight, Thursday at 8:15 o'clock. The program planned by President Ransom Pratt is the same as that presented in Corning some time ago with the exception that Miss Grace Bemis Curtis, piano soloist with the orchestra, will play a different group of piano solos.

The last rehearsal in preparation for the Addison concert was held Sunday afternoon in Corning Free Academy. Charles C. Corwin will conduct the group. It is expected there will be 55 musicians and some interested listeners present at the concert from Corning.

This is one of the largest musical groups to play in Addison in several seasons, outside of the high school. The orchestra has won highest praise from musicians and critics in this vicinity as being one of the finest in the Southern Tier.

The musicians in the unit are preparing for a spring concert to be held in Corning in May. It is expected that will be the last appearance of be as follows: "Inauguration March" from the opera "Boabdil" by Moszkowski, "Andante" from the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowski, "Waltz in E flat" from Chopin will be played by Miss Curtis and "Warum" by Schumann and also the "Rigoletto Paraphrase" by Liszt.

The second part of the program will open with the familiar and enchanting "Andante Cantabile" from Tschaikowski; "Overture" to the opera "Mignon" by Ambrose Thomas, 'Prelude in G Minor" from the works of Rachmaninoff and the program will close with the "Ballet Egyptien" by Luigini.

The Amici Musicae, musical organization of the school will sponsor the concert for which a very nominal charge will be made.

Much of the mortality that is common to the average pen of chicks comes during the first three weeks. After that time, with good management and lack of disease, the chick has an excellent chance to thrive and grow.

Ag Freshmen Defeat Grades

The Ag freshmen defeated the grade pupils in a decided upset on the True Gym floor Tuesday night by a 33-24 score.

Each team had won one game and the grades were favored by everyone except the Aggies, who had predicted they would win.

During the first half the Ags outplayed Robbins' Wonders by a big margin. However during the second half the grades put on the pressure and managed to close the gap somewhat but their efforts were futile.
